Frank Schettino • November 2017

Greeting fellow DFC'ers,

Welcome to November. The temps are cooling off and the Desert Fly Casters are heating things up in Rocky Point Mexico at the Desert Fly Casters 54th annual Rocky Point trip. Yes!!! its the 54th annual trip. At the November meeting we'll get a cast by cast account of the festivities, pictures, a few tales of the all the fun and fish they caught.

At this months meeting we have Duane Redford. If you remember, Duane was here a couple years ago with his "Fly Fishers Playbook". A great read if you want to learn more about nymph fishing. Duane is here with his new subject "Hidden in Plain View". I'm excited about this new subject and I think you will be too.

Hope to see you at the meeting,

Tight lines,
Frank Schettino

DFC Outings to keep in mind...

Canyon Creek Outing

When: November 18th and 19th. Starting at 8:30 to 9:00 am. finishing at 1pm.
(we will have a Sat group, and a Sun group, per who signed up for what.)

Where: Lower Canyon Creek, at the porta potty hole.

Who: The members of DFC who signed up.

What is it?

The idea behind this outing is to build the skills of the participating anglers on one of Arizona's few Blue Ribbon catch and release trout streams. The "on the water mentors" are well versed in this stream and small stream tactics in general. We hope to cover the subject of how to fish small pressured streams with information such as approaching the water, how to best present the fly and where fish hold.

Participants need to have their own gear. Gear list should include what ever your small stream set up is. Recommendations are 3 or 4 wt rod outfit, a 5 WT can work in a pinch, but with low water conditions a lighter line outfit will be more effective. I recommend bringing waders and boots, as November can be chilly. You should be prepared for warm and nice, or cold and nasty, as this is fall in AZ. Bring flies, Streamers, Hoppers and Ants, and your BWO box. Tippet this time of year is skinny, like the water 5x-6x, and we typically fish longer leaders.

Fishing conditions will vary. This is fishing; we hope to get folks onto some fish, but the true goal of this outing is to help you get into fish by putting our collective best practices into play on your own. This time of year we might be in the start of the brown trout spawn, at which point we could see some of the big fish out in the open. Generally these fish spawn in waves not all at once, so well use good judgement on which fish to target.

Thanksgiving Fly Tying Challenge

We're hosting our first Fly Tying Challenge at the November club meeting (11/8/2017). Using only the materials provided, participants will tie a "Thanksgiving" themed fly of their choice. Think "Iron Chef," but for fly tying. Obviously, we'll have turkey materials—quills, biots, and flats. The rest will be a mystery until the day of the event.

Rules: The contest will begin at 6:30 and run until the break in the meeting. At that time, all entries will be collected, photographed, and uploaded to the club's DFC Members Group on Facebook for judging. The fly that gets the most votes will win a $25 Sportsmans Warehouse gift card at the December meeting.

The contest is open to all skill levels; creativity goes a long way. Feel free to bring your own vise, tying tools, and thread, or use the club provided equipment. However, you can only use the materials provided.

The Essentials of Fly Casting

Event Dates: Thursday, November 9, 2017

Event Location: McQueen Park Activity Center • Event Time: 7pm – 9pm • Event Cost: This is a free event

Event Host: Jim Sommercorn, FFI Master Casting Instructor

Contact Email: jsommercorn@gmail.com

Please RSVP in advance and include "Essentials of Fly Casting" in the subject line.

This is a classroom presentation, so participants will need to bring only paper and pen to take notes if desired. Participants will learn the substance of fly casting (what you need to do to cast effectively) and to distinguish between that substance and individual style of fly casting (how you perform the substance). Participants will gain knowledge that can be used to improve their own casting, to identify and correct their own casting faults, and to help others to become better fly casters.

Keys to improving your fly fishing skills...

by Joe Staller

We have all heard the old adage that "20% of the fisherman catch 80% of the fish" and in my experience that is more or less the truth. So, what can you do if you unfortunately find yourself in the "80% of the fisherman that catch 20% of the fish?"

Here are a few hints:

-Ask questions. You will find that the best fisherman are actually pretty good about asking each other questions. Ask the obvious questions (What fly are they taking?) but also ask the associated questions: What type of line are you using? What kind of retrieve? How much sink time before you start your retrieve? Are you using 5X tippet? How long is your leader? Is there a certain time of day that fish bite best?

-Observe. Are you seeing rises near the bank? That could be due to terrestrials (ants, hoppers etc.) dropping off shore line vegetation. Rises below a riffle? That is probably emerging mayflies or caddis. If you are just seeing a bulge in the water and not the mouth of the fish, they are probably taking an emerging mayfly just under the surface. Are you seeing rises right at dusk, but can't see the flies? That might be spent mayflies. Get our your seine, sample the flows, flip over a few rocks, and see what is in the river.

-Have a working theory. After asking questions and observing, it's time to tie on a fly and start experimenting. As an example, if you show up at a high country lake, see damsel flies flying around, and other fisherman tell you that the fish are taking a size 10 generic peacock fly fished with an erratic retrieve on a slow sinking line, my working theory is that the fish are taking damsel nymphs. I would probably tie on a couple different colors of damsel nymph imitations and toss them near weed beds and see how much action I get. If I don't get a bite in 30 minutes, I would question my working theory. Perhaps the fish are really on leeches? Change to leeches and experiment with different retrieves, different sink times etc. If that doesn't work, maybe they are taking fathead minnows? If you get a bite, remember what you were doing and try to repeat it.

-Keep a log. There are a lot of fishing situations where there are not many clues to guide you. As an example, you show up at Apache Lake by yourself in February. No fish are rising. The water is a little murky. Where do you start? Well, you may have ran into this situation before, and if you keep a written log you can probably dig through it and give yourself some ideas. The log I keep would tell me what time of year I fished a particular body of water, what flies you and other fisherman tried, and what worked best. Consulting my log, I would quickly remind myself that the murky water would require a bright fly and I would tie on a small chartreuse and white Clouser on a type 3 sinking fly line, and fish steep banks and points. If the water was clear, I would use a more subdued fly, like an olive semi-seal leech, and look for ledges where the fish could ambush a bait fish.

-Sharpen your basic skills. Most aspects of Fly Fishing are pretty simple, but it is key that all of these elements are repeatable and predictable. Learn the basic knots and become quick and efficient. Learn how to quickly rig to fish with two flies, strike indicators, and extra split shot. Practice casting these different rigs, so that you learn when to use a tight loop (one dry fly) and a more open loop (multiple flies, strike indicator etc.) Not every good fisherman is good long distance caster, but most of them are very accurate at short to medium ranges. You won't catch many fish if your flies are always in the trees!

-Fish with the top 20%. You will learn more and faster if you spend some time with the best fisherman you know. Most fly fishers are pretty generous with their time, especially if you are sincere about your efforts to improve, and take their suggestions. It wouldn't hurt however, if you buy lunch, help out with the gas money, and share your stash of microbrew!

-And sometimes you just get lucky! A recent trip to Henry's Lake in Idaho is a good example of how doing everything wrong can sometimes be the right thing. We have fished this lake on and off for 12 years, and the one fact we were all convinced of is that the fish always took a leech stripped on a sinking line. We were fishing a popular area, and observed several float tubers hook fish as a faster rate than we were. We overheard one of the guys say: "I lost another scud!" We headed back to the cabin that night, and furiously tied up size 10 scuds. The next morning, one of our guys suspended these scuds below a strike indicator, and caught more fish than everyone, including a 9 and 10 pound cutbow. The float tubers paddled over and asked what was working, and just laughed when told that we had overheard that they were fishing scuds. Turns out that all of their fish were taking a black woolly buggie, and the size 16 scud trailer had attracted no fish! We all had a good laugh, and handed them size 10 scuds....

Fishing - A Great Way to Stay Humble

By Jim Strogon, Writer - Life on the Fly • Payson Roundup Newspaper

Are you interested in catching (and releasing) some really big trout? I'd suggest you give Silver Creek, outside of Show Low, a try. Silver Creek is a spring fed creek that maintains great water temperature for trout throughout the year. The stream is a bit unusual in that it is a slow-flowing creek that has many deep pools where hundreds of 18-22 inch trout are tantalizingly close to the fishermen. Depending on the conditions of the water the day you visit, it may be a bit murky or extremely clear. Even if it is murky, there are fish throughout the creek! From October 1st through March 31st, Silver Creek is a catch and release stream that requires the use of barbless, single hook flies or lures. No bait is allowed. The regulations change back on April 1st each year. You can read more about it on the azgfd.gov website.

Big trout ignoring your fly time and time again can be maddening. I often find myself changing flies ten to twenty times on this creek in four or five hours of fishing, trying to find the right fly for the day. The last few times that I have gone, I thought I had finally figured out the pattern as I was catching fish pretty consistently. They seemed to like my little brown midge size 16-18 drifted under an indicator about a foot to eighteen inches below the surface.

I had noticed on the times the stream was running a bit clearer, that although there were sometimes thirty or more big trout within sight of my casting location, that only a few fish were actually in a feeding position. They were sitting calmly in the current and would move to inhale aquatic insects that floated by. These were the fish that would take my fly. The vast majority of the other trout in the pool however, seemed restless and often chased other trout around the pool; and these fish were not interested in feeding.

A common mistake in a pool full of trout is to get locked into that particular pool.

If the trout are not interested in what you have to offer them after a reasonable attempt with a few fly changes, I strongly suggest moving on. It has been my experience that moving just a pool or two on that creek, or any creek, is sometimes all that it takes to change my luck. The nice thing about Silver Creek is that although there are reeds along much of the creek, there are several openings that you can cast to that hold a lot of fish. In addition to locating a good casting position, you also have to strategize on the best place to stand so that you can net your catch quickly and return it unharmed to the water.

My latest trip this year was quite humbling. I was feeling like I had this creek figured out. As I approached the creek, there were four fishermen at one of my favorite spots catching fish, so I moved upstream to the next opening past more fishermen that were also catching fish. I had already changed flies five or six times when I came to a pool where a dad and his ten year old son were fishing on the other side of the creek. I moved upstream out of their casting range and started fishing my side of the pool. In the span of about twenty minutes, they each had caught three large trout. I was still fishless. Fly fishermen are generally very willing to share what is working, and the dad suggested I try a white San Juan worm or a white chamois worm. With that tip, I landed one within five minutes, and was sure my luck had changed. They must have pulled in another ten fish in the next half hour and I didn't get another bite! I moved further upstream, tried a few more flies; moved downstream and tried a few others and left with one fish for the day.

My fishing buddies, who had started further upstream also had done quite well throughout the day. I was feeling like the only guy on the creek who had a bad day. But there is no bad day of fishing, right? It was great day! I caught a twenty inch trout, watched an osprey flying over the creek, and got to do what I absolutely love to do on a beautiful, late fall day.

I am already thinking about what my plan of attack will be on my next trip. I can't wait to get back to Silver Creek.
